

LIFE LESSONS:

What Goes Around, Comes Around

- Finding acceptance in yourself leads others to accept you as well
- Staying true to yourself can lead to possibilities in life you didn't expect
- It takes faith in yourself to thrive in a harsh world
- Faith in yourself and your ability to carry on after tragedy is a scary but essential lesson to learn
- Your identity isn't static but grows with you as you discover more about yourself
- It takes immense courage to put your trust in others, knowing they might fail you
- The strength of a relationship is built on the trust you have in the other person
- Trust can be hard to achieve and easily broken with one wrong move
- Trust can not just be given; it has to be earned through actions
- You can't always trust strangers to have your best interest at heart

- Deep love can protect us even after the death of a friend or family member
- Love has the power to alter us in positive and negative ways
- Love can help us to be our best selves